[from a Nov 1995 newspaper article sent by Donald Hoopes Hannum of Wagontown, PA]

When it was sold in 1973, Hoopes, Bro. & Darlington, Inc. was the last known operating wheelworks in the western Hemisphere. The Smithsonian Institution had made a film about the company, believing it to be the last opportunity to record authentic early methods of making wooden wheels.

Hoopes, Bro. & Darlington was once West Chester's largest employer. It occupied two city blocks in the borough's southeastern quadrant. The complex included woodworking factories, the business office, wood-drying kilns, wood storage sheds, a railroad platform and a water tower.

Hoopes, Bro. & Darlington is featured in the Society's exhibition "All in a Day's Work, Occupations in Chester County, 1870-1945" which runs through March 1996.

The company had a fine reputation for its excellent products, winning gold medals at the Austrian Exposition in 1873, the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition in 1876 and the Paris Exposition in 1878.

From 1866 to 1973, Hoopes, Bro. & Darlington produced a variety of products in addition to wagon wheels. The company manufactured pick and axe handles for the Pennsylvania Railroad, wheels for early automobiles, caisson wheels during World War I, rolling pins and potato mashers during World War II, wheels for street vendor push carts, skis and the West Chester "Walloper" baseball bat. One of their noteworthy achievements was supplying carriage wheels for Emperor Napoleon in 1870. [The article ends with more info about the exhibit and the museum.]

Too bad we didn't have this before the last newsletter, so those interested could have attended the exhibition. Does anyone know if the film about the company is available? It might be nice to have it on videotape for family reference.
