Vol. I, p 191 [excerpted from pp 15 & 16 of a Vol. XIX, No. 4 (Fall 1993; ISSN 0270-7500) PENNSYLVANIA HERITAGE magazine article sent by Jim Haudenshield of Rogers, AR]

606. MILTON HOOPES was a potter who produced some of the valued redware which, with its accompanying documentation, has been used by the Chester County Historical Society to "...encourage the study of redware for far more than its aesthetic appeal." The redware is noted for its restrained decoration revealing English and Scotch-Irish Quaker influence, the most recognizable form being specially commissioned fancy flowerpots which generally have an incised date or name on the side, usually the name of a Quaker woman. "Account books, price lists and newspaper advertisements reveal what kinds of shapes and forms were readily available to the public. They also show trade patterns and customs. The account books of Milton Hoopes show that his customers sometimes paid him with bricks, lime, straw, and wood for his business or more personal items for him and his family. One gentleman exchanged shoemaking services for redware and a woman exchanged a velvet bonnet."
